Using Art in Social Work Practice

Edited by Ephrat Huss and Eltje Bos

Although there is much art use related to social work, such as arts-based research, visual culture, visual anthropology, community art, photo-voice, art therapy, outsider art, arts in conflict negotiation, and arts for social change, they are not canonized within the social work literature.

Organized into three sections, this book shows how arts have been used by social workers with specific populations and in specific countries. Each section provides the specific skills, techniques and theoretical issues used in each example in a handy summary thus furnishing readers with the theoretical and practice knowledge of how to use arts from within social work rather than as a borrowed element.
